P&P SIG Undergoes a Changing of the Guard with New Fiscal Year

By Audrey Cielinski Kessler

The Policies and Procedures SIG begins a new era with the start of the 1998-1999 fiscal year and the appointment of a new manager and a few members of the supporting cast.

The new manager, Audrey Cielinski Kessler, previously served as the SIG’s newsletter editor, a position that is now held by Michelle Anderson. Assisting Michelle are Luette Arrowsmith (formerly the SIG’s chapter-level SIG liaison team leader) and Susan Sereno. Taking over the helm at the liaison team is Elizabeth Turpin, Ph.D. The membership team also has a replacement member, with assistance now provided by Joy Osaka-Lu. The programs and projects team remains vacant and eagerly awaits a willing volunteer.

Continuing in their positions from the previous fiscal year are Nancy Ford Demeter (public relations), Kris Henige (Web page), Jerry Laing (membership) and Audrey Cielinski Kessler (LISTSERV).

With the new team in place, goals have been formulated for the fiscal year. Here’s a summary of each team’s goals:

SIG Newsletter
• Solicit articles, edit and publish four issues of the SIG newsletter, STEPS & SPECS.
• Ensure that production deadlines are met.
• Enter SIG newsletter in STC’s 1999 newsletter competition.

Public Relations/Web Page
• Continue writing FAQs (frequently asked questions) for the SIG’s Web page.
• Complete the editing and approval process for the first FAQ, on ISO 9000, written by SIG member Ralph Robinson.
• Upload the ISO 9000 FAQ to the SIG’s Web page.
• Open contacts with other SIGs and outside organizations.

A Welcome Note from the Editor

By Michelle Anderson

There have been a few changes to the Policies and Procedure SIG this fiscal year. I, for one, welcome these changes. Change opens the door to new and exciting challenges for everyone. With new challenges come new knowledge and a chance to grow both professionally and personally.

As the new editor of STEPS & SPECS, it is my hope that this newsletter will also serve as a forum for the active exchange of ideas and learning from others’ experiences. The SIG members are some of the most respected in our industry. I encourage each of you to share your knowledge and experience with everyone in the form of short articles to be published in the newsletter or by work-

See WELCOME, p. 2
This commitment includes entering STEPS & SPECS in the SIG newsletter competition at the society’s 1999 annual conference in Cincinnati. We invite you to be part of the team effort through your article contributions.

If you have an idea for an article, please e-mail the editor, or submit articles to the address shown in the box on page 2. We look forward to a successful and informative year!

SIG LISTSERV Encourages Exchange of P&P Ideas

By Audrey Cielinski Kessler

While it has been in full operation for only a few months, the SIG’s LISTSERV has caught members’ attention and generated a modest amount of electronic discussion. Topics have ranged from generating a policy on Web-site development and the standardizing of procedural documentation to soliciting volunteers for SIG leadership positions and recruiting presentation participants for the society’s 1999 annual conference.

Discussion topic possibilities are virtually endless. The only restriction is that they be pertinent to some aspect of policies and procedures. If you have an idea, question or comment that’s important to you, share it with your fellow P&P professionals by posting it on the SIG’s LISTSERV.

To post a message to the list, address your e-mail to stcppsig-l@stc.org. Specify a subject, and type your message in the body.

Book Review:
Establishing a System of Policies and Procedures

By Tom Tomasovic

In his new book, Establishing a System of Policies and Procedures, Steve B. Page uses the subtitle “Setting Up a Successful Policies and Procedures System for Printed, On-line and Internet Manuals.” By the author’s own description, it is “a complete rewrite of my first book, Business Policies and Procedures Handbook (© 1984, Prentice-Hall, Inc.). Both were written to share the author’s more than 25 years of experience in the area of policies and procedures documentation. The current volume primarily addresses advances in technology which have moved many organizations toward online presentation of procedural documentation. It speaks very well for the author’s commitment to continue the never-ending process of growth.

The book is targeted toward “[t]he policies and procedures professional, team leader, first-line supervisor, manager, strategic planner, computer professional, technical writer, trainer, forms professional or anyone who wants to establish a successful policies and procedures system.” Writing any sort of book to target this diverse audience is an ambitious undertaking, and Page has done a commendable job. He clearly addresses policies and procedures as an integral part of the business strategy and development for any organization. He regards the procedures analyst (or team) as an important part of any business effort.

The book is not long (152 pages), and the style provides for quick reading. What he could not prepare me for was the amount of information packed into a limited number of words. I found myself thinking that many paragraphs were “intense” and that I wanted considerable time to reread, think about, ask questions and seek out other sources of information to which they pointed.

...He clearly addresses policies and procedures as an integral part of the business strategy and development for any organization...

Page covers the process of creating policies and procedures from conception to completion, beginning with the most basic (and frequently misunderstood) distinction between a policy and a procedure. He provides valuable insight into the composition of a policies and procedures team (and the qualities needed for its members), its place within an organization and its relationship with other parts of the organization.

The book covers the mechanics of creating, revising and distributing (including the approval process) policies and procedures documentation, in both hard copy and online formats. Particular emphasis is placed on establishing a strict format for the creation of documents, a system which turns procedure writing into a “fill in the blanks” exercise. The book, however, is not intended to trivialize the task. The intention is to make it more efficient, both for the writer, the reader and for those subject matter experts who may be expected to provide raw information.

Two other areas of the book came as a pleasant surprise: forms management and implementation and training. Page clearly sees these as within the purview of a policies and procedures function. The perspective of a professional gatherer and distributor of information can uniquely serve these areas, and organizations should consider the wisdom of this approach. Procedure analysts and their advocates should bring these additional possibilities to the attention of potential employers and managers.

Do I have any qualms about this book? Only minor ones. Considering the breadth of the information provided, it has a limited bibliography (only 27 entries). However, this is more of a practical guide than a research work, so it is certainly not a critical flaw, and the included references and Web site addresses provide ample opportunity for exploration. The book provides examples to illustrate the practical principles covered, but some of these could have been more extensive. While the writing style can seem at times terse or even didactic, I came to realize that this was not an attempt to “beat anyone into submission” but rather a personal choice to present opinions clearly and succinctly.

There is much to recommend in this book, and I add my voice to its supporters. I only wish I had seen its predecessor years ago.

...The intention is to make it more efficient, both for the writer, the reader and for those subject matter experts who may by expected to provide raw information...

For five years, Tom Tomasovic worked in the P&P Unit of NatWest Markets, both as a writer/editor and as a supervisor/developer. He previously reviewed Nimble Documentation for STEPS & SPECS. He created and presented a word processing system for the production of policies and procedures at the 1998 STC Annual Conference.
